The Creation of Lucifer

Lucifer is a very powerful and bright Archangel (his name literally translates as light-bringer, shining one, morning star, in various languages) and he was "born" with a chip on his shoulder, with good reason.

Our Mother and Father were still getting to know each other at the time of his creation. It was at one point, early in this courtship, that Mother complained that Father's light was too bright for her, so bright it was a bit frightening.

Rather than figuring out how to make his vibration more gentle and soft, our Father simply travelled to the dividing line that separates the Void from Creation, and dumped that "too bright" aspect of himself in there.

This was what created Lucifer, who was immediately subjected to the influence of the Void's residents, Ahriman and his Asuras, who reinforced his already hurt feelings at being abandoned there.

Mother and Father had both fragmented aspects of themselves (both deliberately and unconsciously) into the Void before, and usually that piece of essence didn't have much, if any consciousness, except for a set of imprinting that told it "I shouldn't exist"; but the energy fragmented this time was very bright and conscious and had, actually, a lot of good qualities to it.

That's how Lucifer managed to escape the Void and avoid becoming an Asura himself. By the time he found his way out though, he was as we have come to know him in the stories of the War in Heaven – a bright, powerful and persuasive Archangel who was pissed at God and wanted to do things his own way.
